The Government Science College, Vankal, took a significant step towards environmental responsibility by hosting "The Tree Planting Initiative" program on 5th July 2018. This program aimed to cultivate a culture of environmental stewardship among students, faculty, and staff, while simultaneously contributing to the local ecological health and fostering a stronger sense of community. Through meticulous pre-event planning, the college ensured a successful program. This included collaborating with campus grounds staff or forestry experts to select the optimal planting sites, procuring native tree saplings suitable for the chosen location, securing necessary tools and equipment, and promoting the event through various channels like flyers, posters, social media, and college announcements. Additionally, volunteer registration and organization ensured a smooth execution of the planting activity. The planting event itself proved to be a valuable learning and community-building experience. Following a welcome address highlighting the program's goals, participants engaged in a brief educational session on proper tree planting techniques and sapling care. Divided into teams and assigned planting locations, students, faculty, and staff actively participated in planting 50 native trees, effectively increasing the local tree canopy and enhancing the campus environment. The event concluded with refreshments and social interaction, further strengthening the sense of community and shared responsibility. The program's success extended beyond the immediate act of planting. Not only did it contribute to the environment by increasing the local tree cover, but it also raised awareness about the crucial role trees play in combating climate change, improving air quality, and providing wildlife habitat.
